

Welcome to the island without cars

Tunø is a small natural haven with great history and atmosphere that everyone should experience. A vibrant island society with a village, school and shopping.

There is nothing better than to spend some wonderful hours together on the island without cars - with plenty of opportunities to forget the humdrum of everyday life and slow down. Here you will find beautiful and unspoiled nature that encourages mindfulness and quality time. With a treasure map in hand children and grown-ups who feel young at heart can walk around the island and receive a nice custom-made Tunø medal as a reward.

We warmly welcome you and we are looking forward to sharing Tunø with you.

Vegetables from Tunø

The island has been involved in open-air gardening since the 1990s and is best known for its exceptionally good leeks. Every summer, the island's vegetable stalls offer new potatoes, crispy green asparagus, fresh carrots, peas and other fresh produce.

We do not know for sure whether this is due to the many hours of sunshine, the mild island climate or the high salt content of the seawater - but vegetables grown on Tunø just taste better.

Fun for the whole family

How do you get kids to get up early and go for a long walk? You send them on treasure hunt around the island of Tunø!

On the ferry all treasure hunters can take a free treasure map. Your mission is to solve the tasks while hiking your way along an 8.3 km route around the island. A beautiful custom-made Tunø medal for the children and grown-ups who feel young at heart will be waiting at the finish line.

Denmark's only church & lighthouse in one

In the middle of the village lies the small cosy church, whose 18 metre church tower also functions as a lighthouse. From the top you have a fantastic panoramic view and if the weather is clear you will be able to see the Great Belt Bridge. The bird tower near Bjerget - Tunø's highest point - is also worth a visit. The high hillside on the north of the island offers great views as well.

Traces of the Ice Age and the Stone Age

Tunø has been inhabited since the Stone Age and several pre-historic finds from this time have been discovered.

The island has been nicknamed the Twin Island after the two hilly areas Bjerget and Møllebakken. They used to be separated by a strait of sea in the Stone Age, but this strait is now covered with trees and marshland.

In the steep cliffs to the south and northwest there are clear moraine deposits which are remnants of the glaciers from the Ice Age which helped shape the hills of the island.

Tunø is nature

The beautiful and distinctive nature of Tunø is something quite special and therefore 90% of the island has been protected since 1965.

The island was previously covered by oak forest, but today has varied nature with everything from field flowers, wilderness and wild honeysuckle to different tree varieties such as fig and mulberry trees. They thrive in this special climate.

On the island there is rich bird life with, for example, pheasants, sand martins, gulls and the occasional black guillemot. In the winter months, however, you can also see eiders, velvet ducks, golden eyes and red-breasted mergansers.

While you can spot deer and hares on land, in the waters around Tunø you could be lucky to see seals and porpoises, which sometimes follow the Tunø ferry, the sailing boats, bathers or those walking around Tunø.

Music and art

Since 1987, the Tunø Festival Association has held the family friendly Tunø Festival for four days at the beginning of July - with lots of good music, island life and community spirit. In addition, the Tunø Art and Culture Association arranges Montmartre Days later the same month, where many fascinating artists exhibit and work on the festival grounds for three days. Here there is ample opportunity to refuel on both experiences and art.

Accessibility

It is possible to bring dogs, baby carriages, pushchairs, wheelchairs and bikes with you around the island. However, not all sections of the trail are open for wheeled use. Take extra care in places where the trail is close to the cliff.

Traffic

The marked hiking routes on Tunø cross both privately owned and public areas. Therefore, always follow the signs on site. From April 15 to July 15, everyone - including anglers - is encouraged to use the trail at the top of Nørreklint rather than the beach.
